The tiny hamlet of Phoenicia is home to one of the first non-profit pharmacies in America. Pharmacists and CEO Edward Ullmann, a mover and shaker in the county who has lived just outside the hamlets for 50 years, saw the need to bring a new pharmacy to public good in a town he knew didn’t have one. In April, Ullmann unveiled Wellness RX, Pharmacy For The Public Good, an independent pharmacy opening at the new site, located at 53 Main St. in an old KeyBank building with drugs around the site.

“This is my chance to come back now that we have retired to a lifestyle in the upper part of New York, a very successful pharmacy in Tannersville,” said Ullmann, who was the founder of the chain store. “We’ve been developing a model that’s developed into something where I felt it was time to try to give back to the community.”

It’s a healing, wellness model to bring different products that are really going to be public good for the community. That’s really the only difference between the two.

Mr. Ullmann and public customers will notice a “totally common” pharmacy at the non-profit, where you come to fill a script and when you leave you leave with the price of the medication in the safe. Many independent pharmacies have sold out to chains and non-profit model when the industry went into a “death spiral.” Ullmann began to wonder where future pharmacists were going to come from.

“I'm seeing closing of the urban areas where the poor are,” he said. “I thought we had to come up with a model that was different from what we came up with.”

Ullman said some non-profits provide services to the medically uninsured, but this new community pharmacy is an anchor that is a “completeness” to the “greatness” of the community. It is where people can get help and feel they are a part of something. It’s a service to others. That’s our mission and I think people feel that.
