CHAIR'S MESSAGE

I took a walk on the beach recently during a family vacation. In the distance, I could see children playing. They would run into the shallow surf, stand still for a moment, look down and shriek with joy and laughter while running back to dry land. I watched them as I neared, eager to learn what caused such elation.

Finally, I was close enough to see the entire sequence unfold. The source of amusement was something quite simple and, for anyone who has vacationed at the beach, ordinary. But this was probably their first experience. As sand retreated from beneath their feet, their eyes ignited in wonder and they were electrified by what appeared to be a combination of excitement and perhaps a hint of fear. The simple movement brought them back time and again. By the time I passed them, I was smiling from ear to ear. Their innocence was precious, their joy contagious.

Then I began to think about things that used to excite us as a business community, but which now may only register passing interest. We view reality through a lens colored by decades of experience and little has been easy. We may not be elated about every new development, but we shouldn't be blasé about how far we've come either. How excited were we when we heard a large manufacturer might be interested in a Cumberland Valley facility? Or when a national retailer decided to open its doors? What about when the determined efforts of entrepreneurs resulted in hanging an "open" sign in a window as we struggled to revitalize? These events were the talk of the town. Today, progress and growth are a part of daily life. And that is to say nothing about the stalwart businesses that have provided a livelihood to our area for generations. Do we talk about our progress with the same excitement that we did years ago? We should. We mustn't forget the sacrifices made and risks taken by those who came before us.

That brings me to my point. You, the businesspeople, the members the CVBA, are the ones sacrificing, risking and laboring to provide a better future for our region. You are succeeding and you are an inspiration. I consider it a privilege to be part of this community and to know so many of you. Be proud of what you are accomplishing and know that the CVBA exists to help you tell your story and to facilitate collaboration. Years from now, people will look back on your accomplishments and find courage to continue making the Cumberland Valley a place of opportunity. The CVBA and our partnered Chambers of Commerce will be there to support them.
