Goodyear Ballpark

When Goodyear park opened in 2009, the Cleveland Indians called it home. One year later, they were joined by the Cincinnati Reds making it the only spring training ballpark that has two teams from the same state. Being close to each other usually means there is a great rivalry but the team have figured out how to co-exist in the Arizona spring weather. The one thing you will notice about the ballpark is the massive amount of open space surrounding the park. When the park was first pitched to city officials, that open space was to be developed into retail, restaurants, and other developments but those plans have not come about.

The training facilities for the Indians and Reds are south of the ballpark and are some of the nicest facilities in all of spring baseball.

Goodyear Ballpark was named the best place to see a spring training game as voted by Phoenix New Times readers Best of Phoenix – twice – and by USA Today's 10 BEST reader's choice as the best place to watch a spring training game in Arizona.
